

THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

April 6, 2010

I send warm wishes to all those observing Public Service Recognition Week 2010.

Federal, state, and local government employees devote their time and energy to the American people and our country. Each day, they provide essential services that protect us from harm, educate our families, and keep us healthy. Their dedication and expertise are vital to our Nation, and my Administration is committed to drawing the best and brightest to government service. Together, we will lay a foundation for future progress and build a better tomorrow for all Americans.

As you mark this special occasion, I hope you take pride in your contributions and service to our Nation, and I wish you all the best.
